STONEHAVEN CONSULTING CONTINUES BUSINESS EXPANSION

Stonehaven Consulting has expanded its business support team with the appointment of two new analysts, Katja Glauser and Christine Hsu.

Matthias Hofer, Managing Partner of Stonehaven Consulting, said: “We are delighted to welcome Christine and Katja to our growing team. There was a lot of competition for the positions and we are sure they are the right people for the jobs.

“With clients from a wide range of life science companies, including start-ups and top tier players, as well as private equity, financial and banking sectors, it is important that we can identify and support their specific needs. Expanding our analyst team will help us strengthen our service even further.”

Katja previously worked as a junior consultant with a Swiss-based consulting firm focusing on local health care institutions and supporting them on a strategic and operational level. She has also worked in administrative roles with a start-up based in France and a software engineering company in Switzerland. Throughout her Masters’ studies Katja was a research assistant at the Smart Government Lab, a research program of the University of St. Gallen (HSG). She led the establishment of the first Swiss Smart Government Day, a conference formed by the university.

Katja holds a double degree consisting of the Masters in Business Innovation from the University of St. Gallen (HSG) and the CEMS Masters in International Management.

Christine previously worked on digital transformation projects as a Deloitte Consulting intern and student consultant in consumer electronics and cloud computing. Prior to joining Stonehaven Consulting, she worked in a business development role with a Renewable Energy start-up to help formulate its business plan and commercialisation strategy.

Christine holds a Masters in Management from London Business School (LBS).
